The procession re-formed and marched to the Old Hill semeetery, where ceremonies similar to those at MacFelah were held. Major C. E. Anderson made a few preliminary remarks to the comrades and those present, and then introduced Rev. Haines, who made an eloquent prayer. Rev. B. Ison made the opening address of the day. Addresses were also made by the Revs. Tracy, Lacy and Wilson. They were appropriate to the occasion and reflect credit to the revernal gentlemen. Father Tracy's rendition of Miles O'Rielly's poem, "We Drank from the Same Canteen," made the tears come to the eyes of many of the boys in blue.

Impressive Observance of Memorial Day Yesterday—Graves of they Dead Soldiers Strewn with Spring's Fragrant Flowers.

As Memorial Day recurs each year, it is a source of growing satisfaction that the anniversary is observed and those who gave their lives for their country are honored as they should be. There was a time when patriotic citizens of Wheeling with shame observed the day go by unheeded. Of recent years the city and the veterans have redeemed themselves, and as if to atone for the themselves, and as if to atone for the past, have striven to make each Memorial Day's observance more worthy and more memorable than the last.

Not since the day on which the Soldiers' Monument was dedicated has Wheeling seen a more fitting or more impressive observance of the day than yesterday's, and the interest was well have been the days. They saw the venerable general who had mobilized and led our First West Virginia troops to the first scene of conflict. They saw our old war governor who had issued the first commissions of many of the officers present on that occasion and peard from his lips reminiscenses of those ventful days. They saw the gallant

On the 13th of this month of May, however, occurred the very last conflict with the foe, near Brizos, Santiago, Texas, and by a strange dispensation of Providence, as it were, it happened that the last shot fired in the war was fired by colored troops. Thus it was that in this memorial month the long deferred hopes of the people and all their patient patriotism and countless sacrifices were crowned at length by the flowers of May. To the eyes of the waiting mothers, wives and sisters of this land the flowers of May never bloomed so sweetly or exhaled such fragrant perfumes as on those May never bloomed so sweetly or ex-haled such fragrant perfumes as on those May days of 1865, when fathers, hus-bands, sons and brothers began return-

At a later day the Congress of the United States made this day a National holiday and decreed in its honor that the Executive departments of the Government should be closed and their employes afforded the opportunity to unite with the people in honoring the memory of the defenders and preservers of the Union.

For this purpose then, fellow citizens, we have assembled here this afternoon to supplement the more important and distinctive and impressive ceremonies that have taken place earlier in the day when flowers were strewn by kind and reverent hands on the graves of the particite dead who alsen their last sleep in their last sleep in the control of the last time. The popular heart swelled with gratitude and admiration as it looked on these heroic soldiers. It was then that the french minister, beholding the reserved power of this republic, was fully convinced that it was time for Maximillian to evacuate Mexico. He well understood what all this meant for the advantage that his government had taken of our reverent hands on the graves of the patriotic dead who sleep their last sleep in interpreting strife, and soon Marsha internecive strife, and soon Marshal Bazaine was under orders to embark his
